a.leeart is an art commission organization that hires and partners with artists to provide original and unique art to clients all over the world. We were first established in 2000 in a small office in downtown San Luis Obispo, California. The company comprised of a few college graduates from Cal Poly SLO and UCLA. The name a.leeart originates from one of the founder's Instagram account where she used to post drawings as a hobby. Over the years, the company has created a large network and established a place for themselves in the industry. Now, still headquartered in SLO, a.leeart has expanded to offices in New York City, Tokyo, and Paris.

Mission:

Create a space for art lovers anywhere in the world no matter their skill or knowledge a.leeart hopes to expand wider into collecting, restoring, and auctioning art pieces in the future and is excited to recruit those with a larger set of skills. One of their goals is to explore humanitarian projects such as funding art education in schools, providing art classes to underdeveloped areas, and donating to and volunteering for local initiatives that deal with homelessness, food insecurity, mental health, and etc.

Every year, a.leeart seeks talented artists worldwide who specialize in any art related field to recruit onto their teams to work on various projects for private as well as public clients. Clients vary from high profile corporations seeking creative advertisements to the average consumer looking for a new design for their blog. With the rise of social media such as Facebook and Instagram, freelance artists struggle to find work in such an oversaturated market. These artists can partner with a.leeart to fulfill commissions for clients of their own. a.leeart connects them to clients for a monthly fee and takes a small percentage from each commission.
